COLLARS / NECKBANDS

The easiest method of measuring the circumference of the neck of your dog ( A ) is by using a flexible measuring tape placed about midway down the neck. The tape should be fairly tight around the neck without actually restricting the dog. The specifications for adjusting our collars and neckbands always slightly overlap. This ensures that you are not forced to use the first or last hole to find the optimal fitting. Should the circumference of the neck of your dog be at the upper end of the measurements specified then you can alternatively choose the next larger size. This is especially recommended for dogs that are still growing. Our collar sizes (e.g. size. 30) relate to the total length of the material used without taking the buckle and the fastener into consideration. It should be noted that when considering the range of adjustments the first value relates to the smallest and the second value to the largest adjustment possible.

As a rule: every collar and neckband should be tried on before purchasing in order to ensure that the fit pleases both animal and owner.
